To artist-architect-teacher Shao Fang Sheng of Wood County, now 85, who was brought to America from China by legendary architect Frank Lloyd Wright, and who donated funds to West Virginia University's Parkersburg campus to start a multicultural center.

. To Gov. Bob Wise for ordering round-the-clock enforcement of weight limits on monster coal trucks that destroy rural West Virginia roads and kill traveling families.

To the state chapter of the Alzheimer's Association, the Silver-Haired Legislature, the AARP and the state Division of Highways for successfully backing a legislative bill approving "family-assistance restrooms" at rest stops on interstate highways.

To Kingwood Mayor Sonny Peddicord, a registered tobacco lobbyist, who led his town council to pass an ordinance allowing smoking in public places, in defiance of tough Preston County health rules.

To employees of the state Capitol cafeteria, who served 30 touring Clendenin third-graders who had money to buy lunch, but ejected 15 low/faqs/mats-income classmates who brought bag lunches provided by their school.

To pupils, parents, teachers and staff at John Adams Junior High School, who collected nearly $3,500 to help a pupil's family who had lost everything in a fire.

To more than 50 West Virginians who have donated used cars to the Good News Mountaineer Garage, which gives them to low-income families needing transportation to work.

To Kanawha County canine officer R.D. Mathis and his dog, Bern, who found a Down syndrome victim who had wandered into the woods from his Loudendale home.

To Linda Chapman of Spencer, who set out from Charleston on a "widow's march" to Washington to protest bureaucratic obstacles hindering survivors of black lung victims.

To Bruce Hulbert and other executives of Information Manufacturing Corp. who will create 50 jobs at Webster Springs, in addition to 250 the company has provided in Mineral County.

To St. Albans resident Dennis Pauley, who cleans up rubbish dumped along the Coal River bank, and i15 low/faqs/s demanding a state crackdown on the polluters.

(smile)To Charleston paramedic Anthony Green and Fire Capt. Alan Cottrill, who delivered a healthy son to Aneessa Elswick on her living room couch in a pre-dawn emergency.

(smile) To artist-architect-teacher Shao Fang Sheng of Wood County, now 85, who was brought to America from China by legendary architect Frank Lloyd Wright, and who donated funds to West Virginia University's Parkersburg campus to start a multicultural center.

(smile) To 13-year-old Anthony Lauer of Parkersburg, who researched the accident that killed his grandfather - and wound up leading a drive that raised $50,000 for a monument to 51 workers killed in the 1978 collapse of a cooling tower at the Willow Island power plant.

(smile) To Richwood High School sophomore Timothy Dick, who has been nominated for a national Most Successful Teen award because he created an Internet business, P.C. Problem Solvers, at age 14.

(smile) To Richard Lutz, listed by the regional Red Cross as a 13-gallon blood donor - and Calvin Leadman, 12 gallons.

(smile) To Sen. Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., who was honored as a champion of public health by local health departments across America.

(smile) To Chairman James Williams and other Public Service Commission leaders who want to build a 250-car parking garage - and let it provide evening and weekend spots for patrons of the Clay Center for the Arts and Sciences.
